Power Cuts Stepped Up in Britain

Electrical Union Bars Arbitration

By Bernard Weinraub

LONDON, Dec. 9 (NYT).—Homes, apartment houses, office buildings, schools and Parliament were hit with partial blackouts today, the worst disruption of power since dissatisfied electrical workers began a slowdown on Monday.

This evening the British government had tentatively stepped back the dispute, with Robert Carr, Secretary of Employment, telling leaders of the power workers' unions.

They told Mr. Carr that they would not accept a settlement and will refuse to return to work until the government agrees to a new power strategy unless there is an agreed pay offer.

Prime Minister Harold Wilson presided over a meeting of cabinet ministers today at 10 Downing Street to discuss the line of the union leaders.

The electrical workers insist they are merely "working to a gang of 20" if one of the gang of 20 is off sick, the section will shut down work. It entails just reaching for a switch.

By these tactics the men can easily disrupt the supply while winning full pay and without risk of legal penalty. As workers are essential to the country, they could be prosecuted if they do not strike.

BEER, BAR AND CANDLE—Tradition in Britain is not easily forsaken, come what may. When the electricity slowdown dimmed out London and blacked out their pub, these Britons brought out candles for bitters at the bar.

Cartoon Offends Printers, Who Strike London Paper

By Alfred Friendly

LONDON, Dec. 9 (WPI).—An editorial cartoon pillorying Britain's semistriking power-station workers so offended the printers of the London Evening Standard today that they struck themselves.

The paper, one of the country's two "national" evening papers, lost its main editions before a settlement was reached. In order for production to resume, the management agreed to printers' demands that a statement from them, expressing their views about the cartoon, be published prominently on the same page.

No sooner had this been done, at 11 a.m. than the rotating London electricity blackout hit the Evening Standard's plant, shutting it down until about 3:30 p.m. By then the metal pots of the linotype machines had cooled, causing further delay.

When power was restored in late afternoon, the Standard published an edition carrying a statement signed by the paper's union representatives.

It said the cartoon expressed the cartoonist's opinion. "We wish to make it clear that the opinion is not shared by members of the Evening Standard federated house chapel, which represents the trade unions within this newspaper," the statement said.

It said the chapel strongly deplored the cartoon and felt it went above and beyond the bounds of humor and fair comment.

"However," the statement continued, "to show that we are not so backward as portrayed and we firmly believe in the freedom of the press, we have not refused to print, once given this opportunity to express our opinion."

Meanwhile, the Evening Standard's unit of the National Union of Journalists met and passed a resolution strongly condemning the printers' action. It declared that determination of the contents of a newspaper is solely the prerogative of the editor, and no interference with it from other sources can be tolerated.

The offending cartoon was by the paper's much-admired cartoonist Jack. It was a drawing of the traditional clothed worker, labeled "homo-electrical-sapiens-Britannicus, circa 1970." It showed a hole in place of the heart, and derisively labeled other parts of the body, such as the head "solid bone," the eyes "green with envy," the ears "deaf to reason."

Following the power failure, London's other evening paper, the Evening News, also resumed normal production.

Senate Adds Cambodia Curb In Approving Defense Bill

By John W. Finney

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9 (NYT).—The Senate yesterday approved, 89 to 0, a $66 billion defense appropriations bill containing a provision prohibiting the President from introducing American ground troops into Cambodia without the consent of Congress.

Defense Secretary Melvin R. Laird and Secretary of State William P. Rogers testified before a generally sympathetic Senate Appropriations subcommittee, meanwhile, in support of the administration's request for a supplementary $1 billion in military aid, including $255 million for Cambodia.

The Cambodian request, which could become the climactic controversy of this session of Congress, is running into opposition from some members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee who are fearful that an American commitment to support the Lon Nol government could lead to a Vietnam-type involvement in Cambodia.

In a climax to the long debate in the Senate over imposing congressional restraints on the President's authority to undertake military activities in Cambodia, the

For Crying Out Loud, Keep Your Mouth Shut

EAST LANSING, Mich., Dec. 9 (UPI).—A way has been found to keep tears from the eyes when peeling onions: Keep the mouth shut.

Researchers at the Michigan State University Food Science Department say that closing the mouth while peeling onions keeps tears from developing.

Confessed Dr. Clifford Bedford, a department researcher: "It works for us and it has worked for other people who have tried it. But nobody seems to know why."

Ulbricht Says Berlin Talks Can Get Going

By David Binder

BERLIN, Dec. 9 (NYT).—Walter Ulbricht, the East German leader, declared today that he was "convinced" that substantive negotiations on the Berlin question would "get going."

This was the first time Mr. Ulbricht has given a sign that there was a prospect for success in the East-West talks on the Berlin problem, although he provided no indication of how soon an agreement could be attained.

Ever since the ambassadors of the four victorious powers of World War II—the United States, the Soviet Union, Britain and France—began discussing ways of improving the situation of Berlin last March, Mr. Ulbricht's regime has demonstrated extreme balkiness.

Changed His Mind

But in his speech today to the Central Committee of his ruling Socialist Unity (Communist) party, Mr. Ulbricht indicated he had been forced to change his mind by his six Soviet-bloc allies at his summit meeting with their leaders here a week ago.

Mr. Ulbricht skipped lightly over the four-power ambassadorial talks, which are to be resumed here tomorrow. He regards the talks as an infringement of East Germany's sovereign rights.

Instead, he concentrated on ways of negotiating a pact with the Bonn government on "transit" of goods and persons between the two German states and between West Germany and East Berlin.

He said East Germany was determined to "watch out" for its "sovereign rights" in this matter and hence was demanding "proper treaties" concerning transit with West Germany.

He said the fact that access routes to West Berlin cross East German territory "is not a special hardship of us, but is simply a result of the geographic situation."

He noted also that East Germany (Continued on Page 2, Col. 5)

Basques Trial to Panel After Courtroom Chaos

By Richard Eder

BURGOS, Spain, Dec. 9 (NYT).—One defendant tried to rush the tribunal, his 15 manacled companions struggled on their bench with the police, two military judges drew their swords, and public and prisoners broke into shouts and singing as the trial of members of the Basque resistance broke down into pandemonium this morning.

The revolt of the accused brought testimony and arguments in the Burgos court-martial, which has gone on for a week, to a sudden end.

After the court was cleared of spectators, press and prisoners, the defense lawyers announced that their clients had withdrawn their briefs and asked permission to leave the room.

The presiding judge, Col. Manuel Ordovas, refused and the 16 lawyers sat stonily through a three-hour probation by the military prosecutor.

The prosecutor, Capt. Carlos Granados, maintained his demand for six death sentences, but reduced by 30 years his original call for a combined total of 754 years and one day in jail for the prisoners.

The defense pleas, submitted beforehand, will nevertheless be part of the record that the five-member military panel will consider.

The judges retired in the early afternoon to begin to consider their verdict. Beds were set up this morning in the red brick military barracks where the trial took place. The deliberations are expected to take anywhere from two to eight days, and the judges are not allowed to leave the premises until they finish.

The court-martial has become the center of the most serious political storm that Spain has known since the 1936-39 civil war. It has aroused opposition demonstrations in many places, particularly in the Basque country, and it provided the motive for the kidnapping last Tuesday by Basque guerrillas of the West German honorary consul in San Sebastian, Eugen Behl.

Death sentences, if they are pronounced and carried out, would be likely to set off serious disturbances, endanger the life of Mr. Behl, and involve the Spanish government in new internal and international difficulties.

The outbreak directed at the president of the court today was partly a protest against the restrictions on the defense testimony—though the court has been more lenient in this respect than other Spanish military panels. Mainly, however, it was a demonstration of their rejection of the regime and the institutions, and an assertion of the fighting spirit of the guerrilla group ETA to which most proudly admit belonging.

Milder in Attitude

Today, Col. Ordovas, a cavalryman who clamped down severely yesterday on the lawyers' examination of the accused, returned to his milder manner of earlier days. He not only allowed the last prisoner, Mario Onandia Nachiondo, 22, to talk freely, but he watched with considerable amusement and only taken efforts to rebuke as Mr. Onandia, a tall, strapping man, infuriated the military prosecutor by terming his questions "irrelevant" or rephrasing them.

Mr. Onandia, who is accused along with five others of arranging the killing of an inspector of political police Meliton Manzanas in August, 1968, in San Sebastian

Mario Onandia Nachiondo

—the rest are accused of banditry—denied the charge. His work in ETA was not military, he said, but political.

"I did not have the honor to belong to the military front," he declared.

After 20 minutes or so, his lawyer, Miguel Castells, asked if he considered himself a prisoner of war. Two of the other accused have made this statement, on the ground that ETA was fighting a war to set up a Basque socialist state.

His voice rising, Mr. Onandia said he did consider himself a prisoner of war, then, in a deep voice, he belatedly:

"Gora Euzkadi Aizakatu! [Long live the Basque nation!]"

Immediately, the 15 prisoners sitting handcuffed in pairs behind and below Mr. Onandia, shouted the same slogan and broke into the song of the "Gudaris"—the Basque troops that fought on the side of the Spanish Republic in the civil war.

Several helmeted, gray-uniformed policemen grabbed Mr. Onandia, who nevertheless surged forward several steps toward the dais where the five military judges were seated. At the same time, his companions, still shouting and singing, began trying to stand and were wrestled back by another dozen policemen.

One policeman, red-faced, jumped on a bench and drew his pistol, but a companion made him put it back.

Saigon Planning 1-Day Truces At Christmas, New Year, Tet

By Alvin Shuster

SAIGON, Dec. 9 (NYT).—The South Vietnamese government has decided on one-day truces for Christmas and New Year's despite the interest officially expressed in Washington for an extended holiday cease-fire.

In consultations with American officials here, the Saigon government had decided, in principle, on the brief truces even before the State Department said in Washington Monday that the two governments were discussing a truce extension, in the hope that it would lead to a permanent end to the fighting.

Accordingly, the State Department's statement that it "intended to pursue" the longer holiday truce created some confusion in Saigon. Vietnamese officials asked U.S. Embassy officials for clarification. The embassy replied, it is understood, by providing copies of the Washington statements.

No Formal Instructions

American officials said tonight that they had not received any formal instructions from Washington, not even to broach the subject to Saigon of a longer holiday truce.

South Vietnamese and American officials sought to dispel the widespread impression that U.S. diplomats in Saigon were now hard at work twisting the arms of South Vietnamese officials who are unwilling to change past policy and agree to a longer truce.

What prompted the Washington comments remains a mystery to South Vietnamese officials, who had regarded the issue as closed. U.S. officials have said that Washington left the decision on the holiday truces to Saigon in the last two years and that they would again follow the South Vietnamese lead this year.

Saigon now plans to announce shortly before Christmas that it has decided on the same brief truces declared last year—24 hours over Christmas and New Year's. It is expected later to announce a one-day truce for the lunar new year—Tet, Asia's most important holiday, which falls on Jan. 27.

The Viet Cong radio announced, 30 days ago, all "people's liberation armed forces" would observe three-day cessations over Christmas and New Year's and a four-day cease-fire over Tet. The Viet Cong has also said it "will never accept the so-called extended cease-fire."

The prospect of using an extended holiday cease-fire as a peace initiative first arose last Sunday after Secretary of State William P. Rogers heard Sen. Henry M. Jackson, D. Wash., make the proposal on a television program.

House Votes To Bar Strike Of Railroads

WASHINGTON, Dec. 9 (AP).—Congress took last-minute action today to head off a national rail strike by voting for a moratorium, after sweetening the legislation for the unions by approving a 13.5 percent immediate wage boost.

But with the strike deadline set for 12:01 a.m. EST Thursday, differences were emerging from the House and Senate, and it appeared touch-and-go whether a compromise could be worked out in time to prevent at least partial disruption of rail service.

President Nixon had asked a 45-day delay, without any action on wages, and later indicated his opposition to any inclusion of pay items.

It was not immediately clear whether he would sign legislation including such precedent-setting economic action by Congress.

Nixon Delay

The President asked only for a delay until Jan. 23. The House voted for a March 1 date while the Senate Labor Committee approved Feb. 6.

Both bills included the 13.5 percent immediate wage increase, retroactive in part to Jan. 1, 1970, and in part to Nov. 1, 1970.

The House approved the wage amendment, offered from the floor, by 203 to 184 and passed the package, 220 to 186.

House legal specialists conceded that setting of wages by Congress in this fashion would be unprecedented, but one spokesman said: "Congress can do anything it wants to unless it is declared unconstitutional," leaving open the possibility of later legal challenges.

Recommended by Panel

Union leaders had said earlier they would strike regardless of what Congress did, but later indicated they'd accept a moratorium if coupled with immediate application of the retroactive wage increase, which had been recommended by a presidential study panel and accepted by the industry.

Pending the completion of congressional action, the strike of 500,000 workers remained fixed for a minute after Wednesday midnight.

Meanwhile, Secretary of Defense Melvin R. Laird said the military's plans for rail takeover were ready in the event of a strike. The Post settled the question of sovereignty.

Europe Must Help U.S. Solve Trade Issues

By James Goldsborough

PARIS, Dec. 9.—U.S. Ambassador John R. Watson said today that Europe would be following a "short-broked and costly policy" if it did not help solve the problems being used by worldwide trade protectionism.

Mr. Watson, in his most outspoken speech since taking up his post seven months ago, made clear he felt both Europe and America bore much of the responsibility for the rise in U.S. protectionism and the current trade bill before Congress.

He told the Diplomatic Press Association that though it looked a time would run out in his session before Congress could pass a bill, "it seems to me a certainty that similar legislation will be re-enacted next year and that it will be a good chance of passing."

Mr. Watson's comments, coming when they do, seemed a plea to America's trading partners to do nothing before Congress has an opportunity. Calling the trade

Ambassador Watson

He said that with inflation, unemployment and a short-term debt of nearly $44 billion, some Americans now questioned "the continuation of the role the United States has played in international affairs in the postwar period."

"This is an American problem," he said, "but it is also a European problem, and leaving it to the Americans to solve—or worse, taking actions that make it harder for Americans to solve it—may turn out to be a shortsighted and costly policy."

Mr. Watson made it clear that because of its commitments abroad, the United States could not accept a reduction in its annual foreign trade surplus. He said it was always a "possibility" that America could reduce its international commitments if it cannot afford them, but that it preferred to "share" the costs and commitments.

"When trade is in balance between the United States and the rest of the world," he said, "we overshadows international ones."

Dispute Reported on Trieste

Tito Trip to Italy Put Off at Last Minute

By Alfred Friendly Jr.

BELGRADE, Dec. 9 (NYT).—Yugoslavia and Italy have agreed to a postponement of a state visit President Tito was to have made to Rome tomorrow, according to a joint announcement released here this evening.

The decision, which marked a sharp reversal in the generally excellent relations between the two neighbors, was not accompanied by an official explanation. It was known, however, here that the Yugoslavs were angered by a statement on Monday by Foreign Minister Aldo Moro asserting, by implication, Italy's claims to the Istrian peninsula south and east of Trieste.

The announcement said that Marshal Tito's visit would be rescheduled "as soon as possible." But well-informed sources here speculated that the trip, which was to have included an audience with Pope Paul VI, will be delayed indefinitely. The decision to postpone the two-day visit was made here after daylong conferences of top Yugoslav politicians and diplomats, none of whom were immediately available for comment.

President Tito

Mr. Moro said that Trieste's "zone B" would not be discussed during President Tito's visit, just as it was not discussed during President Giuseppe Saragat's trip to Yugoslavia in 1969. The foreign minister also said: "The [Italian] government will not consider any renunciation of its legitimate national interests."

That phrase pained Belgrade officials. Since the initialing of the London Memorandum of Agreement on Oct. 5, 1954, when Italy, the United States and Great Britain agreed that Zone B would be governed by Yugoslavia, the two neighbors have made a point of talking publicly about it.

Italian forces occupied Istria after World War I and were awarded it by the 1923 Treaty of London. Yugoslav partisans retook the peninsula and even entered Trieste in April and May, 1945, but withdrawing in June.

There have been occasional demonstrations by rightists in the Trieste area, campaigning for the reassertion of Italian sovereignty over Istria and the city that the Italians call Plume and Yugoslavs, Rijeka.

Nevertheless, the Italy-Yugoslavia border is one of the most relaxed in the Mediterranean and one of the busiest. Last month it registered more than 5 million crossings, mostly by Yugoslavs headed for the cheap shops of Trieste and Italians driving to the inexpensive gasoline pumps of Slovenia.

The London agreement gave Yugoslavia the power to govern the area, but did not formally settle the question of sovereignty.

House legal specialists conceded that setting of wages by Congress in this fashion would be unprecedented, but one spokesman said: "Congress can do anything it wants to unless it is declared unconstitutional," leaving open the possibility of later legal challenges.

WILDLIFE CRISIS

IN any deadly epidemic, a few are the first to die. "Wildlife Crisis" is especially concerned with those species which have become extinct and those threatened with extinction in the near future.

In eloquent photographs and paintings, with persuasive rhetoric and esoteric facts, "Wildlife Crisis" says: "Here are the first victims. Here are his fellow creatures for whom modern man has first made the earth unlivable." To lose unrecuperable expressions of life is in itself occasion for mourning.

This book is at one and the same time a cry from—and to—the heart, and a scholarly work of reference. It offers popular writing by that most readable of naturalists, the late James Fisher, and also scores of Latin scientific names of extinct species. It contains a brilliant gallery of pictures, many of them photographs taken by the Duke of Edinburgh, and a systematic discussion of species of birds and mammals endangered or extinct since 1800.

The two principal authors—Fisher and Prince Philip—are supported by other notable men: H.R.H. Prince Bernhard of the Netherlands (president of the World Wildlife Fund), Peter Scott (founder of the World Wildlife Fund), and Stewart L. Udall, Secretary of the Interior under Presidents Kennedy and Johnson. Each adds prestige and another voice to the message of the book.

Prince Philip's 30-page essay, "Life and Wildlife," is both reminiscent and homiletic. He tells us that his boyhood indifference to nature and of how he was "hooked" as a grown man by taking photographs of birds, "simply as a pastime," during long voyages on the royal yacht Britannia.

"Carnilla," by Willard Leach, derived from a 19th-century ghost story by J.V. Le Fanu and staged by Mr. Leach, premiered at Café La Mama where it was labeled "a work in progress." A "distinctive theatrical gem from Mr. Leach and his company," in Times critic Mel Gussow's opinion, "The only evidence of incompletion is minor and purely technical. Is it opera? (Every word is sung.) Or musical? Or since there is film through the entire play, is it a movie? "A gothic chamber play," Gussow decides, on a "mini-stage with maximum imagination." The "credible" cast includes Margaret Bonica, Nancy Kelkin, Donald Harrington and Linda Jones.

Sit Tight

WASHINGTON.—There was a time when every cabinet member of the Nixon administration was fighting to get in to see the President at the White House.

But after Secretary Walter Hickel was granted an audience with Mr. Nixon and fired on the spot, other cabinet officers have decided there is no need to see the President after all.

Six months ago there were three or four cabinet officers waiting in line by the White House gate, hoping to get a glimpse of the President, just so they could go back to their departments and say they saw him.

But all this has changed.

The other day a cabinet officer I know received a telephone call from the White House. His wife answered.

"It's John Ehrlichman. He says you asked a year ago to see the President, and he thinks he can squeeze you in on Thursday between 4 and 5."

"Ob no," the cabinet officer cried. "Tell him I changed my mind."

His wife transmitted the message and then told her husband, "He says even if you don't want to see the President, the President wants to see you."

"Tell him I've got to address a Chamber of Commerce meeting in Oklahoma on Thursday between 4 and 5."

The wife did this and listened. "Yes, all right, we'll be there," she hung up.

"Where will we be?" the cabinet officer asked in fear.

"We've been invited to church services at the White House on Sunday," his wife said.

"Call back and tell him we don't believe in God," the cabinet officer implored.

"Now stop being ridiculous. Surely if the President was going to fire you, he wouldn't do it at church services on Sunday morning."

"You don't know how those people operate over there at the White House. Two weeks ago they canned six poverty lawyers while the choir was singing 'Nearer My God to Thee.'"

"Well, you can't very well refuse an invitation to go to church services at the White House. Besides, if we sit in the back maybe the President won't see us."

"All right, but let's pack and put our stuff in the trunk of the car just in case," he said.

***

The cabinet officer and his wife showed up at the White House the next Sunday. Billy Graham was reading from the Book of Job.

"Why then did you bring me forth from the womb?" "I should have died and not have seen me."

"I never lived." "I should have been taken from the womb to the grave."

The cabinet officer whispered, "There, what did I tell you?"

"The message could be the Secretary of the Treasury," his wife whispered back.

They looked around the room and saw other cabinet officers whispering to their wives.

Billy Graham continued, "Are not the days of my life few?"

"Let me alone that I might recover a little." "Before I go from whence I shall not return, to the Land of darkness and gloom, The black disorder'd land, Where darkness is the only light."

The cabinet officer said, "It's either Romney or me."

Attorney General John Mitchell started passing the collection plate. As he handed the basket to the cabinet officer, he said quietly, "Sit tight until you hear from me."

As the choir sang "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken," a task force from the White House had already taken over the cabinet member's office and changed all the locks on the doors.

Brel Show: Super Case Of Coals to Newcastle

PARIS.—"Jacques Brel is Alive and Well Living in Paris," a most unlikely smash hit based on American adaptations of the French songs of Jacques Brel, opened Broadway on Jan. 22, 1968, and is still running beautifully. Versions are being prepared for Holland, Denmark, Australia and New Zealand. As many as five companies estimate have played it from Washington to Los Angeles, and it did eight weeks in London.

The show is now in Paris in one of the most spectacular cases of coals to Newcastle since Mark Twain published an American translation of a French translation of his "The Jumping Frog." It will be playing in the newly opened basement of the Olympia Music Hall through Dec. 18.

"It is a super case of coals to Newcastle," agreed Eric Blau, who wrote the show with Mort Shuman and whose wife, the singer Elly Stone, plays the lead opposite Shuman.

French audiences have cheered the spectacle and one critic described it with the most measured word in the French language: "stupéfiant." The all-American company convinced that they would flop, decided to look on their limited French run as a shopping spree and are amazed that the French don't find their show outlandish.

"I find it outlandish," says Elly Stone, a tiny woman so moved by her first trip to France that she burst into tears when she saw the Eiffel Tower.

Jacques Brel is a Belgian singer-composer whose lyrics are so special that he says he can't even translate them into French. Few French singers attempt to rival Brel's performances by singing his songs. "If I were French, I wouldn't sing his songs," says Elly Stone, and apparently he has worried that as a result his songs will not outlive him. Eric Blau sold Brel on the idea of the New York Brel show by saying it would prove there can be Brel without Brel. It has.

Brel is given author credit on "Jacques Brel is Alive and Well" and he approved all the adaptations. At times they were direct translations—"Au Suivant," which we call "Next," came out so exact in images and in the fall of the lines it was scary," says Eric Blau. At other times the changes were considerable. Brel's "Jeff," for example, which was a song about a drunk, became a love song in the hands of Blau and Shuman.

In New York Brel saw the show three times. The first time he got up and shouted bravo, at which point the audience, recognizing him from photos posted in the theater, bravoed Brel. The ultimate compliment undoubtedly came in the Stage Delicatessen, when a waiter asked, "Whadda ya want, Mr. Brel?"

"I seen the show," he later explained.

Eric Blau, a New Yorker, first came to Paris as a GI a few weeks after the liberation. "I was 21 and all the dreams of French literature were playing through my head. I was a young writer and you pick up names and affinities."

He met Eluard and Aragon, and Loys Masson translated some of his poems into French. He also went looking for Picasso, found him in his studio on the Rue des Grands-Augustins, had a long chat, and got for him from the FX the only thing Picasso needed, a case of Barbosol toothbrushes.

The heady Paris period over, Blau had various careers including TV production, publicity for various clients—"For example, I was the leading layman expert on dentistry—and ghostwriting for such sports heroes as Mickey Mantle, Jim Brown and Paul Hornung. His partner on the Brel show, Mort Shuman, is a leading rock music writer. Blau and Shuman are now working on a new French piece, a musical version of Inconnu's "Amadeus,"—"for Broadway, no less," Blau says.

Blau has already decided how to celebrate the fifth year of the off-Broadway Brel show in 1973 is Carnegie Hall concert at which Brel will sing one song, and he is planning to direct a film version of the show in Belgium and France this summer. It has only one spoken line and will be, says Blau, a hybrid of "The Red Shoes" and "2001."

For Blau, Jacques Brel is the greatest popular song-writer today. "The only comparison I make is Schubert," says Elly Stone, "because Schubert was working for the pop market of his time. His songs have become part of the classical repertory because they're so fine."

Miss Stone is about to record two albums of songs, mostly by Brel. Until the Brel show she was considered to have a very special appeal, and her past experiences had not been encouraging. At one point she was the background music for a sexual stripper. "I got fired the second night. I was singing some charming folk material; it wasn't what they had in mind."

Since the Brel show, Elly Stone has had rave notices, and has reminded reviewers of everyone from Piaf to Judy Collins ("I'm not reminiscent of anyone," she says firmly). Brel gave her the thing she had never found, good material that suits her gifts, but she refuses to consider her singing as definitive Brel.

"Brel," she says, "does definitive Brel."

PEOPLE

Notes From the Far Side

From Mrs. David Shears, of Bad Godesberg, Germany: "And then," said our son Nicholas (10), winding up his weekly report on the Saturday kiddie matinee, "these guys started searching this place full of crooks and nannies."

A wee dram'll help ye ken the tenor of the assertion of George Catlin, of Palma de Mallorca, that D.G.P.'s description of the Ethiopian Emperor's retainers was daft. "A Vatica priest told me in strictest confidence," writes George, "that those two chaps were really a couple of playboy nephews named, respectively, Hailu Selassie and Shambhau Selassie."

David S. Fuller, of London, inquires: "Is there any truth in the rumour that you really write the Buzz Sawyer column?" Not exactly, Dave, but you're close. If you must know, Buzz Sawyer writes the People column.

"I see the Russians made another boob," writes Walter Dunn from Belfast. "Taking a call all the way to the moon and then leaving the hand-brake off."

"How would you like to play a new game?" asks Chris Lowery, of Geneva. "It's called 'Songs for Swingers.' Here you go:

Songs for Swinging Nuns: "It's getting to be a habit with me."

Songs for Swinging Ted Heath: "Show me the way to go home."

Songs for Swinging Gramercy: "I'm stinking in the Rhine."

Songs for Swinging Apartment-dwellers: "It's all white with me."

Songs for Swinging Bra-Makers: "Don't leave me hanging around."

Songs for Swinging Christian Barnard: "I found a heart in San Francisco."

Songs for Swinging Jockies: "Bennies from heaven."
